OF INGLETON; OR THE FOREST MYSTERY.

The article was read, stating that the prisoner had murdered the man who was recognized as bor husband, and whom she bolleved at the time was the said George Cranliffe; a stimulus was then given her, s pen placed in her hand, and she attached her name in her usual nest, femicine

The rest affixed their signa ures as with sers, and soon after the lawyer took his leave, parting serrowfully with Julia.

All was still as the grave in the apartment, the lamp shed a misty light over those watchers Mr. and Mrs. Remsen sat in the embrasure of one of the windows; Colonel Pes'ing stood, his head bewed on his arm, resting 'gains' the mantel; Harry was looking upon his brother as he sat supporting Julia, whose breath came faint and difficult from her chest. Au bour fied by the stillness was unbroken, when a low sound was heard 'I was the harbinger of death. They sprang to the bedside in time to mark the dark eyes resting upon George's face, to observe the grey has of coming dissolution overspread her countenance, to see ber sink to rest, as settly as if sleep had settled upon her senses, and then a "God's will be done!" escaped tharry, as George, his features convu sed with silent agony present his lips to the pulseless brow, and laid all that was laft of mortality upon the couch, then bowing his head in his hands, he strove to master his rising emotions.

A short time after, he took leave of his friends end loft the room.

As secret as he would have been, as he was roming the hall, be was perceived by Rosa, who was talking with Jim near the door of the sitting room; the former marked the resemblance in hi cature and walk, to her late meeter, and excited as she was by her mistrees' illness, she could not speak, but stood with outstretched hand and distended openalls, pointing toward where he harried through the door. Jim did not see him, s his back was turned toward him, but he wa fected with a portion of Rose's terror, and with me impulse both took to their heels, and fled as fact as possible to the kitchen. Here, as usual, the blacks were congregated, conversing in kw tones of the eventful morning, and as Ross and Jim burst in upon them, partly through fear, partly from sympathy, a wild cry arose from all, and they sat trembling and shrinking, at, they At length Rose found voice to say.

That was the final climax, and gross and terrified wailing resounded upon the air, as they sank on their knees, and alternately bowled, laughed, wept and prayed.

GEORGE CRANLIFYE'S NABRATIVE. Back again to the court-room, where the multitude are listening with breathless engerness to George Cranliffe's story.

We will pass over his narrative of the discovery of the murdered man, and his decision to conceal himself, and take it up where he left Harry and Colosel Peeling on the road, skipping such portions as it is unnecessary to repeat.

"When we parted at Central Clump, I pro eded to Richmond, and remained there during the day; while there I decided up.n a place of leddence—the well known haunted house at the Nor h west end of the village."

A burst of surprise escaped his hearers, but no sound or me voment escaped Bracford.

"The first night of my residence there, the night after the murder, I was startled by the sound of footsteps spproaching the door of the room I had chosen; the man entered the adjoining apartment, and I stole softly forth to ascar-"Judge then of my surprise, when I beheld Nelson Bradford." He paused to mark the effect of his words, but calm and statue like sat the prisoner, gazing so forcely, so unfinchingly at him. "After a soilleduy concerning the dead so re-mentle, to find a secret closet; when his search met with success, he placed a dark looking bundle within it, remarking that there it was safe, and feetening the spring, he prepared to depart. "I hid myself until he descended the stairs, then fired with a sudden thought, leaned over the banister, and hissed - 'Murderer!' Its offeet upon bim was electric, he rashed out of the house, and I saw him not again that night. When the body of the murdered man was borne to the grave, I was present, but disguised, and occupied a concealed position; Bradfard remained after the rest in the churchy ard. Robed in a dark cloak, comp'etely shrouding me, and preventing recognition, which gave us a superdonned a shroud beneath it, I presented my . "He was frightered, amazed, and when I had sufficiently starmed bim, I left him tusensible upon the ground, departing unperceived.

"At various intervals afterward, I contrived to confront bim, and he outest s'ned the supposition that I was the spirit of his victim, returned to earth; he was consequently always convulsed me fear greatly for the life of another, nearly a tached to me by fraternal ties. Oue night as I was reading by the glimmer of my light in the room shove, I was startled by the sound of fuotsteps and voices below me, I has ily donned my disguise and noise essly descended, I was not mistaken; in the dim moonlight which illumined the apartment beneath mine, I detected two men one was Bradford, the other—Pompey, the mis-sing slave from the Hall!"

Agels pre's matters of actorish nent interrupted bios, but without glane ng at Bradford, be

"What was my unaxement to bear the villate by faire a aton cats, and platuring, poleon the mind of the knocket negro against my brother Harry, advaccing the idea that he might have been concerned in the murder, for the sake of obtaining my money."

The fact of Harry Cramitics was overspread with grist and astonishment, as he heard this statement.

" "To beer him ingite the wretched slave, who was afternoon to escape, to murder him? I could at that momen, no... raished in and selzed the wrotes, but the depire to appose him to a count of Justice, restrained me.

"Concealed from view, I behold Hary un-surpectingly throw himself on the grass, await-ing the friend who it was stated would be there a short time after. I beseld the slave, who had been hidden, softly stealing behind him. "I held my breath as I followed, and just as the gleaming knife was raised to strike, I dregged him back, and before he could realize it, burried him off to a cave near at hand; there, he has been hidden ever since. In a meeting with Harry and the Colonel, at the Central Clump, learned from the former, that he suspected Bradford; while we were talking, Colonel Peeling in a moment of abstraction, picked up a stone, and threw it up in the branches of the pines.

When it fell to the ground, it brought with it, something which we found to be a knife, it was covered with rust, and evidently the one used in the bloody deed, and had been thrown there by the assessin, when his fiendish work was com-

Dark and malignant was the fire that shot rom Bradford's eyes, as George proceeded, midst profound silence on the part of the rest. "When a'one, I gave it a close examination and found upon the steel, immediately next the bandle, two letters, which some one had evidently endeavored to erase by griading, but after evere study, I deciphered - 'N. B.'

"A week or so from the last event, Mr. Bradford entered the village inn, caught up a newspaper, and scated himself near the window; suddenly be started up in extreme agitation, and then gazing around to ascertain that he was unobserved, took out his penknife, and cut a notice from the paper and putting it in his pocket book, left the

When he disappeared, a man robed in abover's costume, with a low slouched hat, who had abserved the occurrence, entered the inn, and possessed with a feeling of curiosity, pocketed the paper ; perceiving it was the Richmond Enquirer of four weeks before, he produced another of the same date, to learn what it could have been, to cause Bradford such agitation; he feand the notice read as follows.

And Goorge drew a small paper from his pock ot, and proceeded.

"It this should meet the are of Gordon Con mer Esq., he is requested to immediately communicate with Benton Thaimer and Co Sicamend, as be agreed to. Any person or persons knowing the whereabouts of the said gentleman would oblige by informing him of this notice. Some doubts are entertained as to his safety, a

He is about five feet ten inches to beight, black hair and eyes, aquiline nose, firm, small month; his dress was black, his riding boots marked on the lining 'G. C.' The same initials were upon his pocket handkerchief."

The personal description resembled George Cranliffe minutely, and as he folded up the paper and returned it to his poctet, one glance sufficed to show him that the face of Nelson Bradford was purple with rage.

"I was the person that took the Enquirer. The day upon which the missing man started, i the day preceding the one on which the dead body was found on the read from Richmond. I now considered I had suffic ent evidence against Bradford, and sought the office of lawy or Beren he was for some time in doubt as to my being real flesh and blood; but I soon conviaced him of the reality, and told my story. From him I learned that Julia Cranliffe had sought him with a similar purpose, and also that supposing me dead, she had consented to marry Bradford; but the latter was merely a russ, to make sure of his capture, as from the first she did not intend to link her fate with one, whom even criminals would shun with horror. The Lawyer consected to let me remain concealed, and to arrest him on Mrs. Cranliffe's charge; I being not to make my appearance until the find moment, as guilt, such as his, should be utterly confounded.
